President Dad

Ami Wong is just your average high school girl—she's into pop singing idols and hanging out with her friends. But two extraordinary events have changed her life forever. One is that just recently she lost her mother, who was little Ami's guardian, her friend, the person she most trusted in the whole world. The other is her father, who... well, read on...

IT'S HIM!
I KNOW
IT IS!!

If I close my eyes,
I can still see your face.
If I cover my ears,
I'll hear your voice.
If I can no longer walk,
I'll still run to you.
If my voice is silenced,
I will still cry your name.
If my eyes are closed,
I will still look for you there.
If my heart stops,
my spirit will live on to go on.
If I die, I will live on in you.

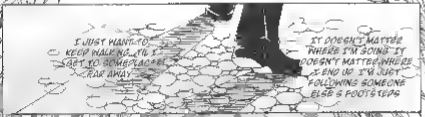
Author's Note: Korea is probably the only one in the world where it's necessary to write this kind of note.

I FEEL LIKE IT DOESN'T MATTER WHERE I GO

EVENTUALLY, I'LL GET CAUGHT AND SENT HOME



I JUST WANT TO KEEP WALKING... TO SOMEPLACE FAR AWAY...
IT DOESN'T MATTER WHERE I'M GOING. IT DOESN'T MATTER WHERE I END UP. I'M JUST FOLLOWING SOMEONE ELSE'S FOOTSTEPS

THEY DON'T NEED ME ANYWAY

FRIENDS SCHOOL I'M THE FIRST DAUGHTER NOW

THAT JUST MAKES IT EASIER TO GO AWAY

President Dad

Ho-Chan Won's inauguration day has arrived and Ami Won has come to terms with the fact that she's going to have to get used to cameras, reporters, fans and the youth of Korea depending on her to show them the way. Not the most settling thought when just a week ago her biggest concern in the world was whether or not RICK got her letter. As if being hurled into the public eye wasn't bad enough, her aunt and her cousin are right around the corner ready to sabotage her ascension in the hopes that they will in turn rise to the position of prominence. And the new friend she made at school, Moo-Hyun may also have ulterior motives.
